Description of Property and Eligibility Determination (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map and photo

The property is a 2.5-story stone building located south of Baltimore National Pike. The building includes an original rectangular block and several non-contributing additions. Constructed on a continuous stone foundation, the original block's main façade is its north, which faces out onto Baltimore National Pike. The north façade is a symmetrical five bays wide with a central door. The front door is a plate glass replacement to the original with a three-light transom. There are two interior gable end brick chimneys. The windows - all replacements - are 6/6-light double hung vinyl sashes with storm windows. The building's masonry finish is course rubble with flattened arches over the windows, a water table, and subtle quoining. The side-gabled roof is clad by composition shingles.

Since this building was surveyed in 1978 there have been several alterations and additions that significantly diminish this building's integrity. There is a one-story concrete block extension attached to the building's east side that extends the main (north) façade and envelops the eastern side of the building. This extension, which is more than twice the width of the original block includes handicap ramps and a roof that wraps into the original block's porch area extending half way across the main façade. There is a two-story vinyl-clad addition to the building's rear (south). This addition has significantly altered the building's original massing, and combined with the addition extending from the building's east wall, dominates the lot once occupied by the former Pine Orchard Hotel and its dependencies. As seen from the east, traveling westbound in the realigned Baltimore National Pike corridor, the building is lost amid the unsympathetic liquor store extension. Travelers in the eastbound lane see the building's west wall partially obscured by signs and the massive rear addition silhouetted against the sky.

Property History

In the 1978 MIHP form the property was named "Brosenne's Stone House" for the property's owner at the time. The property has been known by several names, including the "Hopkins House" and the "Pine Orchard Hotel." According to the 1978 MIHP form the building was constructed in c. 1840 although it appears to have been constructed earlier. The building is located in a small remnant of a larger property known during the early nineteenth century as "The Plantation."

Anna M. Hopkins (1789-1864) acquired the property through a court judgment in 1844; she owned the property until her death and it reverted to the family (Tyson) of its previous owner in 1866. [1] The property is attributed to "Mrs. A. Hopkins" in Simon Martenet's 1860 map of Howard County. Little is known of Hopkins. The 1850 Census has her living alone and owning $1,000 in real estate. [2] Her parents were Richard Hopkins and Ann Snowden and she was a cousin of Baltimore merchant Johns Hopkins. In 1869, The Tysons sold the property - then comprising forty-three acres - to Henry Rhine and he is shown as its owner in the 1878 Howard County atlas. [3] The Rhines primarily were farmers. Henry Rhine's household in 1870 included his wife, son (Joseph), and two African American servants: a cook named Anna McCoy and a farmhand named Richard Chase. [4]

The stone building appears to have been known as the "Pine Orchard Hotel" since at least 1860 when the name appeared in Martenet's county map. The hotel was one of several mid-nineteenth century businesses in the Pine Orchard hamlet. Among them were a store and a blacksmith shop. The 1868 atlas also shows An African Methodist Episcopal church in the hamlet and census data show large numbers of African American farmers living in proximity to the Pine Orchard Hotel.

The Rhines - Henry first, and then his son, Joseph - owned the property until after the turn of the twentieth century when they sold it to Henry Grimes. [5] It wasn't until 1919, when Grimes sold it to Edward F. Brosenne, that the building's name appeared in land records. On 11 December 1919, Brosenne paid $3,000 for the "lot embracing the stone house and out buildings long known as the Pine Orchard Hotel." [6]

The Maryland State Roads Commission in 1939 surveyed the Brosenne property as part of its "Edmondson Avenue Extended" project that realigned US Route 40. The small parcel (c. 0.83 acre) became isolated from its greater agricultural context in the early twentieth century.

For much of the twentieth century the Brosenne's owned the stone house and operated a portion of the property as a store. Elmer F. Jones, who lives east of the property, moved to Pine Orchard in 1954. "It was just an old stone building there," Jones recalled. "It looked like a stone house where people lived in. That's what it looked like then. Brosenne family did used to live in it but they set up a little store in there and had store there and I don't know how long they ran the store." [7] Another neighbor, Barbara Brookhart, remembered the store because her mother ran a hair salon in the family house and styled Mrs. Betty Brosenne's hair: "All I know they sold a little bit of groceries and then when they went into the liquor business and eventually the sold it and made it a liquor store, the whole thing." [8]

Shortly after Elmer Jones moved into his new house near the property, local supermarket workers went on strike and Brosenne's store became an essential fixture in the community. Elmer Jones explained:

"When I first moved here, first built this here, this Brosenne had a store up there and I don't know how long it had been in the Brosenne family but they kept it for a good long while and they sold out then. Well, he had to put a grocery store in there and during the strike, Giant Food and Safeway and all, was on strike and he had a grocery store in there and meatcutter place in there and he put a basement underneath there, put a track in there, he killed - could hang eight or ten beeves - down in that cooler down there." [9]

Jones' son even worked for the Brosennes during the strike. "My son lived down the street here," he said. "He worked for Giant but when Giant was out on strike why Brosenne hired him up there and of course he'd been in the store business for a few years anyway and he knowed all about it. He got Brosenne's store set up there. Oh it looked nice. He had it all straightened up. Brosenne didn't know nothing about running a store no how in the first place." [10]

In 1968 the Brosennes sold the store, which became a liquor store by the late 1960s. Since its sale by the family several partnerships and companies have owned the property operating the Pine Orchard Liquors business on the premises.

National Register of Historic Places Evaluation

This property appears to be eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A for its associations with the National Road and the former Pine Orchard hamlet. The building has undergone numerous alterations to its fabric and through multiple additions and the replacement of windows, has significantly diminished integrity of design, materials, and workmanship. property's setting and feeling have been significantly diminished by the isolation of the building from its larger agricultural context, the removal of auxiliary buildings, and the transformation of the National Road corridor into a densely developed commercial strip. This property does not appear to be eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C. Although there is a family relationship by a former owner (and perhaps the builder) to a person significant in American history (Johns Hopkins), there does not appear to be a direct association between Hopkins and this property therefore the property does not appear to be eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion B. The proposed National Register of Historic Places boundary for this property is the footprint of the original stone house and its period of significance appears to be from c. 1840 to 1954.

Description

The stone masonry building is 2 stories high, 5 bays wide, 2 bays deep, and features a stone water table and quoins. This portion of the building has a high pitch, side-gable roof sheathed with asphalt shingles and two interior end wall brick masonry chimneys. A late 19th century, 1 story stone masonry addition with a high pitched side-gable roof was constructed on the east elevation. This addition was clad with siding by 1980 and is currently clad with T-111 siding. The property was extensively altered ca. 1985 when a second side addition was constructed on the east elevation and two additions, one 1-story tall and one 2-stories tall, were constructed to the rear of the 19th century elements. The ca. 1985 additions are all constructed of concrete block which has been clad with vinyl siding on the front and side elevations. At the time of the additions, the windows in the original stone building were replaced with vinyl sashes and a wraparound wood porch was constructed. The original entry door has also been replaced.

Continuation Sheet No. 1

History

Brosenne's Stone House is a ca. 1840 structure originally known as the "Pine Orchard Hotel" which was located at mile post fourteen on the Frederick Turnpike. The property is the last remaining structure from the community of Pine Orchard, which was demolished during the construction of Route 40 in 1950. The western terminus of the road realignment is located directly in front of Brosenne's Stone House.

Evaluation

Brosenne's Stone House is not eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A, B, C, or D. It is not associated with any individual or event significant at the local, state, or national level; it is not an outstanding or unique work of architecture; nor does the property have any archaeological potential. The hotel was constructed in association with the development of the Frederick Turnpike as a roadside commercial business, but is neither the only nor best extant example of its type in Howard County. Other examples currently listed on the state register, such as Disney's Tavern, retain the integrity that Brosenne's Stone House lacks.

The property has had a complete loss of integrity due to extensive modern alterations to both the building and its setting. The ca. 1985 additions and alterations have adversely affected the building's integrity of design, materials, and workmanship. The construction of Route 40 in the 1950s also had an adverse effect on the property's integrity, with the realignment of the main route and the construction of a straight six-lane roadway altering the property's setting as the surrounding area became increasingly dominated by commercial strips instead of farmland. The combined effects of these two events have led to the building's loss of integrity of both feeling and association.

BROSENNE's STONE HOUSE

Circa 1840

Brosenne's Stone House faces north on the south side of U.S. Route 40. It is a five bay wide, two room deep, two story high, gabled roof (running east-west) stone house with wide brick chimneys inset into its east and west walls. A three bay wide, one room deep, one story high, gabled roof (running east-west) stone building rests along the larger house's east wall. A gabled roof vestibule covers its central bay.

The interior of the large stone house features a central hall and original staircase and mantlepieces, wide attic floor boards and tongue and groove attic trusses put together with pegs and marked with roman numerals.

Vertically aligned and proportionally scaled fenestration is decorated with flat arched stretcher stone lintels and projecting stone sills. Fine stone work is also seen in the building's stone quoining.

Known as the Pine Orchard Hotel in the nineteenth century and an old tavern along the Baltimore - Frederick Turnpike, it may well have begun as a sumptuous private home for one of the early Howard County settlers.

Brosennes Stone House faces north on the south side of Route 40 4/10 of a mile west of its intersection with Centennial Lane. It is a five bay wide, two bay deep, two story high, high pitched gable roof (running east-west) fieldstone structure with wide brick chimneys inset into its east and west walls.

A one story high, three bay wide, one room deep, gabled roof (running east-west), stone structure rests on the east wall of the house and is believed to be the earliest building of this architectural complex. A gabled roof vestibule enters into the central entrance of its north wall.

The north elevation of the main building, holds a central rectangular open bible and cross paneled door, surmounted by a three light transom and flanked by two, rectangular, double-hung windows, holding the two-over-two horizontal lights, decorated with flat arched, stretcher stone lintels and flat wooden sills. All the windows on each elevation of this house are similar to these.

This main stone house also features an interesting stone water table and fine stone quoining. The five second floor windows on its north elevation are proportionally scaled and vertically aligned.

Two wide stone steps on the east side of the north wall lead to the cement landing of the one story high, flat roofed, open porch, held by three wooden doric columns on brick piles which runs along the three east bays of this wall.

The interior features a central hall, off each side of which, on the first floor, are two rooms, the west of which has been made into one large room. Two mantles are located on the west wall of the first and second floor and one on the first and second floor of the east wall. A fine staircase with curly maple tapered spindles is representative of early nineteenth century staircases.

The south elevation features a stone patio with three stone steps leading to the central rectangular entrance, surmounted by a one light transom and flat arched, stretcher stone lintel. An interesting roman arched stone lintel over the wide, rectangular cellar door is placed east of the entrance.

Mr. Brosenne excavated the basement and constructed two large fireplace openings.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Brosenne's Stone House is architecturally and historically significant.

Architecturally it is one of the fine, well proportioned, well scaled, two story high, gabled roof (running east-west) stone houses of Howard County with central hall and double pile (two room deep) organization on a grand scale, indicating its builders were persons of some importance.

It features vertically aligned, proportionally scaled fenestration, and exceptionally fine stone work in its flat arched stretcher stone lintels and projecting stone sills. The wide attic floorboards and marked tongue and groove attic trusses put together with pegs is a further indication of an early building date. This roof construction is reminiscent of that found in the John Due House, HO-161 with roman numerals indicating where each piece was to be joined. It is believed that this was assembled on the ground first, then marked for placement in constructing the roof. Conservatively, the building dates from circa 1840, though it is probably older than that.

Historically, the building is also significant. Located on the Baltimore-Frederick Turnpike, it became a stop for those traveling along the road and was known in the nineteenth century as the Pine Orchard Hotel.

Many stories abound but few are documented. Initially, it was probably the residence of a prominent Howard County settler, very likely a member of the Dorsey family. When the road from Baltimore to Frederick was opened, it then became a tavern or stage stop. This developed into its becoming The Pine Orchard Hotel. Today it has reverted to what is believed to have been its original use - a graceful residence for those who operate the adjoining commercial enterprise (liquor store) which occupies what is believed to have been the earliest structure. An old carriage house, south of the stone house was torn down by Mr. Brosenne.

Architecturally, it is beyond question a notable building, built on a grand scale. Historically, it is notable as a tavern - hotel along the old Baltimore - Frederick Road. Located on U.S. Route 40 which is presently stripped zoned for commercial use, this old stone house stands in a precarious situation. For these reasons, the Brosenne Stone House should be considered for inclusion to the National Register of Historic Sites and the State Critical Areas Program.
